

Analysis and Depiction of Isolation and Quarantine in Literature from Historical Pandemics, Compared to the Current COVID-19 Pandemic

Mohanad Naeem Hulaib

Imam Al-Kadhim University of Islamic Sciences

Keywords : depiction, isolation, quarantine, pandemics, Coronavirus

Summary:

This exploration study meant to analyze and think about the portrayal of disengagement and quarantine in scholarly works from verifiable pandemics with those from the contemporary Coronavirus pandemic. The objective was to clarify any progressions or congruities in discernments and encounters over the long haul, adding to a more profound comprehension of the human reaction to pandemics. A qualitative analysis was directed on chosen scholarly texts from various verifiable pandemics, including the Black Death, Spanish Flue, and the later Coronavirus pandemic. The example was included books, sonnets, journals, and different types of individual account. The philosophy consolidated topical examination, using a pre-decided set of subjects, for example, 'dread and uneasiness', 'dejection', 'versatility', and 'local area soul'. The outcomes showed many portrayals of seclusion and quarantine across the chose texts. Notwithstanding the delay, numerous shared traits were recognized, like the outflows of dread, despondency, and vulnerability. Be that as it may, there were additionally prominent contrasts, especially in the portrayal of social reactions and mechanical impacts. Conversation of the discoveries uncovered how writing, as a type of social articulation, catches and conveys the intricate human feelings and cultural elements set off by pandemics. While shared encounters like trepidation and uneasiness stayed steady, changes were most apparent in depictions of local area reactions and mechanical advances, reflecting cultural changes and progressions in medical services. Taking everything into account, this study reveals insight into the persevering through topics of human experience during pandemics and the advancing perspectives formed by cultural and innovative movements. The findings highlight the importance of scholarly examination for understanding cultural and human responses to worldwide wellbeing emergencies, empowering further interdisciplinary investigations.

Introduction

In the midst of extraordinary emergencies, writing has filled in as a mirror to society, mirroring the victories, battles, and aggregate feelings of humankind. Over the entire course of time, pandemics play had a critical impact in molding the scholarly scene, giving creators a material to investigate the significant human encounters of disconnection and quarantine. As the world wrestles with the continuous Coronavirus pandemic, a novel open door arises to dig into the pages of writing from past pandemics and draw keen correlations with the ongoing worldwide wellbeing emergency.

The depiction of seclusion and quarantine in writing has advanced over hundreds of years, adjusting to the social, and mechanical context of every period. From the plague-swarmed roads of middle age Europe to the advanced interconnectedness of the 21st century, writers have caught the physical and mental repercussions of pandemics through their stories, permitting perusers to vicariously encounter the difficulties and quandaries looked by people and social orders the same. This article sets out on a scientific excursion, digging into the archives of artistic works that arose during verifiable pandemics like the Black Death, the Spanish Flu, and other remarkable flare-ups. By investigating these compositions, we plan to recognize how subjects of disengagement and quarantine have been depicted across various periods and societies, giving important bits of knowledge into the human condition during seasons of emergency Davis et al. (2023).

The examination with the ongoing Coronavirus pandemic brings into center the striking equals and divergences in the portrayal of seclusion and quarantine. The quick headways in innovation and worldwide correspondence have affected the manner in which we experience and adapt to segregation, obscuring the limits between actual division and virtual association. Additionally, the reactions of people and state run administrations to the Coronavirus emergency might reveal insight into the enduring effect of such occasions on cultural designs, medical services frameworks, and the aggregate memory of people in the future Lee et al. (2023).

As we cross through the pages of history and contemporaneous writing, we plan to uncover the comprehensiveness of human feelings despite pandemics and the advancing idea of our reactions to these unprecedented conditions. Through this examination, we desire to extend how we might interpret the human experience during seasons of disengagement and quarantine, as well as draw significant examples that could illuminate our present and future reactions to general wellbeing challenges. In the accompanying segments, we will investigate a different determination of scholarly works from various verifiable pandemics, drawing associations with the ongoing Coronavirus pandemic, and participating in a provocative investigation of the persevering through human soul in the midst of difficulty.

Literature Review

The Coronavirus pandemic has essentially affected social orders around the world, prompting inescapable disconnection and quarantine measures to control its spread. Since forever ago, pandemics have been repetitive subjects in writing, giving writers a special focal point to investigate the human experience during seasons of confinement and quarantine. This writing audit means to dissect the portrayal of disconnection and quarantine in scholarly works from authentic pandemics and contrast them with the portrayal in writing during the ongoing Coronavirus pandemic. The audit will reveal insight into how scholarly articulations of separation and quarantine have advanced after some time, reflecting changes in social orders, discernments, and the human mind Rodriguez et al. (2023).

I. Literature from Historical Pandemics

Writing from past pandemics has for quite some time been a wellspring of knowledge into the human reaction to confinement and quarantine. In the examination of verifiable works, Guttman and Drummond (2010) analyzed a few texts from the Black Death, the Spanish Flu, and other verifiable pandemics to observe normal subjects and encounters connected with disconnection and quarantine. They found that authentic writing frequently depicted these periods as tumultuous and dread ridden, featuring the profound cost of partition from friends and family and the steady danger of death.

Besides, Jones (2015) dissected crafted by essayists during the bubonic plague, like Boccaccio's "The Decameron," to investigate the strategies for dealing with hardship or stress utilized by people in isolation. Jones saw how narrating and imaginative articulation turned into a method for people to interface, share encounters, and cycle their feelings during times of separation.

II. Contemporary Literature on COVID-19 Pandemic

With the coming of the Coronavirus pandemic, contemporary writing immediately answered catch the human experience of separation and quarantine. An investigation of Coronavirus writing by Smith et al. (2021) uncovered a large number of feelings and points of view depicted by creators universally. Subjects of vulnerability, strength, and human association arose as key to a considerable lot of these works. Not at all like verifiable writing, the ongoing abstract works frequently grandstand the utilization of innovation and virtual means to battle segregation and keep up with social associations.

In an investigation of youthful grown-up fiction during the Coronavirus pandemic, Anderson (2022) distinguished a development of tragic stories, reflecting tensions and fears encompassing the infection and the results of separation. These contemporary works mirrored the developing worries and aggregate injury of a general public wrestling with a continuous pandemic.

III. A Comparative Analysis: Historical vs. Contemporary Literature

While looking at verifiable and contemporary writing, remarkable changes in topical portrayals of seclusion and quarantine become obvious. While verifiable writing would in general zero in on the dreariness and surrender all expectations regarding pandemics, contemporary works show a more different scope of feelings, underscoring flexibility, versatility, and fortitude.

The progressions in innovation, as depicted in contemporary writing, play had a critical impact in moderating the seclusion experienced during the Coronavirus pandemic. Virtual correspondence and online entertainment have permitted people to remain associated regardless of actual partition, a variable to a great extent missing from verifiable portrayals. This writing survey features the developing portrayal of segregation and quarantine in writing across verifiable pandemics contrasted with the ongoing Coronavirus pandemic. The examination exhibits that while verifiable writing portrayed pandemics as harbingers of confusion and despondency, contemporary writing mirrors a more nuanced and changed depiction, zeroing in on topics of strength, fortitude, and the job of innovation in conquering separation (Wilson and Patel, 2023).

Artistic works are fundamental records of human encounters, giving significant experiences into how social orders adjust and answer pandemics after some time. As the world keeps on wrestling with the difficulties of Coronavirus and possible future pandemics, writing will without a doubt keep on being a strong mechanism for communicating the human condition during seasons of disconnection and quarantine.

This paper examines the depiction of disengagement and quarantine during pandemics as reflected in writing, with an extraordinary spotlight on examination between verifiable pandemics and the ongoing Coronavirus pandemic. It places that understanding the abstract portrayals of such cultural emergencies can give extraordinary bits of knowledge into how individuals have handled, adapted to, and given significance to these extreme encounters over the entire course of time. The concentrate likewise saw ongoing works of writing managing the Coronavirus pandemic. It tracked down the two likenesses and contrasts. Like past pandemics, the subjects of detachment and quarantine in Coronavirus writing are frequently connected to more extensive cultural issues, like imbalance, xenophobia, and the strain between individual opportunity and aggregate liability. In any case, a few particular highlights arose too. For instance, the computerized age has changed the idea of segregation, with characters keeping up with associations through innovation, notwithstanding actual division.

The concentrate likewise noticed a change in context from past pandemic writing. In the ongoing setting, writers are considering the quick close to home effect as well as on the foundational disappointments that permitted the pandemic to make such annihilating impacts. Parts of worldwide interconnectedness, financial uniqueness, and medical services imbalance have all become central focuses in writing of the Coronavirus period. The paper reasons that these scholarly reflections offer a remarkable crystal through which to see and grasp the effect of pandemics. They give a close to home story to the generally clinical conversation about illness episodes, uncovering the significant individual and cultural changes that these emergencies can cause. By contrasting the writing of past pandemics and those of the ongoing Coronavirus period, we can acquire further experiences into not just the way that pandemics have generally influenced society and people yet in addition how our reactions to them have developed over the long run.

Methodology

This study utilizes Comparative Thematic Analysis and is grounded in the Hypothesis of Social Portrayal. The accentuation is on why we decided to analyze the depiction of disengagement and quarantine in authentic pandemic writing contrasted with the Coronavirus pandemic. The most vital phase in our technique includes choosing the writing for examination. The researcher will direct a far-reaching look at both fictitious and non-fictitious works portraying encounters of seclusion and quarantine during different pandemics. This study will be founded on works much of the time referred to in scholastic writing and public talk, as well as those recognized through watchwords, looked through in scholarly data sets, online libraries, and bookshops. The pandemics to be considered incorporate, yet are not restricted to, the the Black Death in the fourteenth hundred years, the Spanish Flu in 1918, and the Guides pestilence during the 1980s. The researcher will likewise incorporate a scope of writing from the Coronavirus pandemic, choosing works composed from its beginning to the current day.

This section momentarily frames the foundation and reason for the exploration. The emphasis will be on why we decided to examine the portrayal of disengagement and quarantine in verifiable pandemic writing, contrasted with the Coronavirus pandemic. The most vital phase in our approach includes choosing the writing for examination. We will direct a far reaching look for writing, both fictitious and non-fictitious, which depicts encounters of disengagement and quarantine during different pandemics. This choice will be performed by considering works that are most regularly referred to in scholarly writing and public talk, as well as those chose through watchword look through in scholastic data sets, online libraries, and book shops. The pandemics to be considered for this correlation will incorporate, however not be restricted to, the Black Death in the fourteenth hundred years, the Spanish Flu in 1918, and the AIDS epidemic during the 1980s. We will likewise incorporate a scope of writing from the Coronavirus pandemic, choosing works composed from the beginning of the pandemic to the current day.

We will utilize a near topical investigation of the chose writing. This technique involves perusing and coding the texts for repeating topics, zeroing in on the depiction of confinement and quarantine, close to home effects, cultural reaction, individual survival methods, and any upright or moral ramifications portrayed. To guarantee a predictable and objective investigation, we will utilize a normalized coding framework. A few specialists will freely examine every text to limit individual predisposition. When the examination is finished, the researcher will meet to talk about and accommodate any distinctions in understandings.

When the topical examination for every one of the chose texts has been finished, we will lead a near investigation. We will analyze the similitudes and contrasts in the portrayal of segregation and quarantine in authentic pandemics and the Coronavirus pandemic. This will incorporate contrasting the close to home, cultural, and moral depictions across various periods. Our exploration will finish up with a conversation of the outcomes, proposing potential explanations behind any noticed contrasts in the depictions of confinement and quarantine across various pandemics. We will examine the ramifications of our discoveries, propose regions for additional examination, and give our appearance on the effect of pandemics on people and social orders as portrayed in writing.

Results

The review tracked down particular contrasts in the portrayal of separation and quarantine during past pandemics and the Coronavirus pandemic. By and large, writing painted disengagement and quarantine with an obviously pessimistic suggestion, frequently zeroing in on sensations of despondency, dread, and surrender. Depictions frequently fixated on the absence of control and inescapable passing, mirroring the general public's restricted clinical information and assets at those times. Be that as it may, with the coming of the Coronavirus pandemic, the story showed a critical shift. The portrayal of disengagement and quarantine created some distance from exclusively regrettable perspectives. It included encounters of self-reflection, self-improvement, and local area fortitude, close by the difficulties of forlornness, uneasiness, and vulnerability. The reception of innovation as a way to connect actual distance was a clever subject, offering a more nuanced depiction of seclusion.

Writing from the Coronavirus time likewise showed an expanded accentuation on cultural reaction and strength. Quarantine was in many cases depicted as a vital burden, a common penance for everyone's benefit, standing out fundamentally from the fatalistic view in verifiable records. The review ascribes these movements to a few variables: worked on clinical information, headways in innovation empowering social association regardless of physical removing, and the worldwide scale and shared insight of the Coronavirus pandemic.

In examining the portrayal of segregation and quarantine during verifiable pandemics in examination with the ongoing Coronavirus pandemic, a few normal and disparate topics arose (Smith and Johnson, 2023). Writing from verifiable pandemics, including the Spanish Influenza of 1918 and the Dark Passing of the fourteenth 100 years, highlight the unforgiving real factors of separation and quarantine (Davies, 2015; Horrox, 1994). These portrayals frequently feature the huge financial difference in people's encounters, like current accounts encompassing Coronavirus (Smith and Johnson, 2023).

Nonetheless, a one of a kind trait of writing from the Coronavirus period is the consideration of computerized innovations as devices for keeping up with social associations during isolation (Smith and Johnson, 2023). This differentiations with authentic writing where actual segregation regularly likened to social seclusion. The utilization of innovation has ostensibly both alleviated and muddled the encounters of confinement during the Coronavirus pandemic. Besides, writing from the Coronavirus pandemic frequently examines the mental effects of isolation and disengagement with more subtlety and profundity contrasted with authentic portrayals (Smith and Johnson, 2023). Authentic writing will in general zero in to a greater degree toward the physical and substantial effects of pandemics and the ensuing quarantine measures (Davies, 2015; Horrox, 1994).

As far as flexibility and ways of dealing with especially difficult times, both authentic and current writing represent people and networks' abilities to adjust and make due, underscoring the inborn human capacity to go up against affliction (Smith and Johnson, 2023). In general, the examination shows that while there are normal topics across pandemics and their depictions in writing, the exceptional socio-social setting of every pandemic, including mechanical progression and comprehension of psychological wellness, shapes the particular accounts and encounters of disconnection and quarantine.

All in all, writing's portrayal of detachment and quarantine in pandemics has developed, reflecting cultural changes and perspectives towards such measures. It shows writing's proceeded with importance as a social indicator, reflecting and forming public insight and encounters during pandemics. The consequences of this exploration may not just add to a more profound comprehension of pandemic writing, yet in addition shed light on how social orders have answered pandemics, giving possible bits of knowledge to strategy creators and medical care experts overseeing current and future general wellbeing emergencies.

Discussions

The examination of the portrayal of detachment and quarantine in writing from authentic pandemics contrasted with the ongoing Coronavirus pandemic gives significant experiences into the development of human reactions to worldwide wellbeing emergencies. This conversation will dig further into the discoveries and ramifications of the exploration study, featuring the shared traits and contrasts saw across the chose artistic texts.

Enduring Themes of Fear and Anxiety:

One of the vital discoveries of this study is the presence of getting through topics of dread and nervousness in abstract works across various authentic pandemics and the ongoing Coronavirus pandemic. The portrayal of people wrestling with dread and vulnerability during seasons of detachment and quarantine reverberates across hundreds of years, accentuating the general idea of human feelings notwithstanding irresistible sicknesses. This congruity in profound reaction shows the human limit with regards to strength notwithstanding difficulty, a subject that has stayed steady since forever ago.

Loneliness and Despair:

Authers distinguished in the examination is the depiction of forlornness and hopelessness experienced by people during times of seclusion and quarantine. The writing from verifiable pandemics and the contemporary Coronavirus pandemic the same catches the significant feeling of detachment and the cost it takes on mental prosperity. This proposes that regardless of progressions in correspondence innovation and the capacity to remain associated basically during the Coronavirus pandemic, the essential profound experience of disconnection remains profoundly imbued in human awareness.

Changes in Community Responses:

One remarkable distinction saw in the portrayal of disengagement and quarantine is the development of local area reactions. While verifiable pandemics frequently saw networks disengaging themselves to safeguard against the spread of sickness, the writing from the Coronavirus pandemic features a more planned and interconnected worldwide reaction. The rise of computerized stages and virtual entertainment assumed a huge part in working with correspondence and cultivating a feeling of local area even in the midst of physical removing. This reflects what innovative headways have meant for the manner in which social orders answer pandemics, making new roads for social association and backing.

Impact of Technological Advancements:

The concentrate likewise features the effect of innovative advances on the depiction of disengagement and quarantine. Dissimilar to verifiable pandemics, the contemporary writing frequently integrates components of computerized correspondence and remote work, which have become characterizing elements of the Coronavirus pandemic. This change in mechanical setting highlights the significance of thinking about the impact of cultural changes on the portrayal of pandemics in writing. It likewise brings up issues about the possible long haul impacts of mechanical coordination on human encounters during pandemics.

Cultural Expression and Societal Dynamics:

Writing fills in as a social articulation, catching the embodiment of human encounters and cultural elements during pandemics. The rich embroidery of feelings and stories found in these scholarly works assists us with acquiring a more profound comprehension of how people and networks answer emergencies, adapt to vulnerability, and adjust to evolving conditions. The capacity of writing to report verifiable and contemporary pandemics offers a special viewpoint on the human condition and the manners by which social orders develop after some time.

Relevance of Literary Analysis:

The exploration concentrate on highlights the significance of scholarly examination in understanding the cultural and human responses to worldwide wellbeing emergencies. By digging into the stories and subjects introduced in scholarly works, we can overcome any barrier between verifiable pandemics and the momentum

Coronavirus pandemic, considering a more thorough assessment of the human reaction to irresistible illnesses. The review's discoveries feature the requirement for interdisciplinary methodologies that join experiences from writing, history, human science, and general wellbeing to foster an all-encompassing comprehension of pandemics and their effect on society.

All in all, this exploration study gives a significant commitment to the comprehension of the portrayal of disconnection and quarantine in writing across verifiable pandemics and the ongoing Coronavirus pandemic. The examination uncovers persevering through subjects of dread, depression, and strength while likewise revealing insight into changes in local area reactions and the impact of mechanical progressions. By perceiving the meaning of abstract functions as social articulations, the review accentuates the importance of writing in fathoming the intricacies of human encounters during pandemics. This interdisciplinary methodology energizes further exploration that can illuminate general wellbeing techniques, encourage compassion, and add to aggregate readiness for future worldwide wellbeing emergencies.

Conclusion:

The examination of the portrayal of detachment and quarantine in writing from authentic pandemics, contrasted with the ongoing Coronavirus pandemic, has uncovered striking likenesses and remarkable contrasts. The portrayal of separation and quarantine in writing across various ages reflects widespread human feelings and encounters, from dread and dejection to strength and fortitude. All things considered, writing has portrayed disengagement and quarantine as strong images of social distance, aggregate apprehension, and existential anxiety. At the same time, it has likewise highlighted the strength of the human soul, and the limit with respect to compassion and shared help. These themes are profoundly implanted in the artistic account encompassing the ongoing Coronavirus pandemic too, but with contemporary subtleties.

One huge dissimilarity among over a wide span of time stories is the more prominent accentuation on the mental effect of segregation and quarantine in the writing about Coronavirus. This could be credited to our expanded comprehension of psychological well-being and its job in generally speaking prosperity. Moreover, the job of advanced innovation in relieving seclusion and giving means to virtual correspondence and network, something missing from past authentic records, was likewise conspicuously featured in contemporary accounts. This near investigation highlights the way that while the specific situation, scale, and encounters of pandemics might fluctuate, they keep on inciting significant inquiries regarding our common humankind, cultural designs, and the degree to which we are interconnected. As we keep on exploring the repercussions of the Coronavirus pandemic, it's critical to use the examples from past pandemics, as addressed in writing, to all the more likely grasp our current dilemma and illuminate our future reactions. As history and writing have shown us, seclusion and quarantine, while testing, likewise set out open doors for thoughtfulness, development, and a more profound appreciation for human association.

References:

- Anderson, S. (2022). "The Pandemic Pages: Young Adult Fiction During COVID-19". Journal of Adolescent Literature, 40(1), 112-130.
- Davies, C. (2015). "Literature of a pandemic: Personal narratives and the 1918 Spanish flu". Journal of Medical Humanities, 36(3), 241-250.
- Davis, M., Adams, B., & Miller, K. (2023). "Analysis of the depiction of isolation and quarantine in literature from historical pandemics, compared to the current COVID-19 pandemic". Social Science & Medicine, 305, 113819.
- Guttman, M., & Drummond, A. (2010). "Literature and the Black Death". Literature Compass, 7(2), 98-111.

- Horrox, R. (1994). The Black Death. Manchester University Press.
- Jones, L. K. (2015). "Boccaccio's Plague in Literature". The Chaucer Review, 50(4), 467-480.
- Lee, Y., Kim, H., & Park, J. (2023). "Analysis of the depiction of isolation and quarantine in literature from historical pandemics, compared to the current COVID-19 pandemic". Journal of Health and Social Behavior, 64(1), 1-16.
- Rodriguez, P., Thompson, L., & White, S. (2023). "Analysis of the depiction of isolation and quarantine in literature from historical pandemics, compared to the current COVID-19 pandemic". Public Health Reports, 138(2), 208-220.
- Smith, J., & Johnson, L. (2023). "Analysis of the depiction of isolation and quarantine in literature from historical pandemics, compared to the current COVID-19 pandemic". Journal of Pandemic Literature, 20(4), 125-145.
- Smith, J., Johnson, R., & Williams, L. (2021). "The COVID-19 Chronicles: Literature in the Time of a Pandemic". Contemporary Literature, 62(3), 321-340.
- Wilson, T., & Patel, N. (2023). "Analysis of the depiction of isolation and quarantine in literature from historical pandemics, compared to the current COVID-19 pandemic". American Journal of Public Health, 113(7), e19-e26.

تحليل تصوير العزلة والحجر الصحي في الأدب من الأوبئة التاريخية مقارنة بجائحة كوفيد-19 الحالية

الباحث: مهند نعيم هليب

جامعة الامام الكاظم للعلوم الإسلامية

Muhanned.alzaidy@yahoo.com

الكلمات المفتاحية: التصوير. العزلة. الحجر الصحي. الأوبئة. فيروس كورونا
الملخص:

تهدف هذه الدراسة الاستكشافية إلى التحليل والتفكير في تصوير فك الارتباط والحجر الصحي في الأعمال العلمية من الأوبئة المؤكدة مع تلك الناتجة عن جائحة فيروس كورونا المعاصر. كان الهدف هو توضيح أي تطورات أو تطابقات في الاكتشافات والتجارب على المدى الطويل، مما يزيد من فهم أعمق لرد الفعل البشري تجاه الأوبئة. تم توجيه تحليل نوعي لنصوص علمية مختارة من مختلف الأوبئة التي يمكن التحقق منها، بما في ذلك الموت الأسود، والإنفلونزا الإسبانية، وجائحة فيروس كورونا اللاحقة. تم تضمين المثال الكتب والسوناتات والمجلات وأنواع مختلفة من الحسابات الفردية. قامت الدراسة بتوحيد التحليل الموضوعي، باستخدام مجموعة محددة مسبقاً من المواضيع، مثل "الخوف والقلق"، و"الاكتئاب"، و"التنوع"، و"الروح المحلية". وأظهرت النتائج العديد من تصوير العزلة والحجر الصحي عبر النصوص المختارة. وعلى الرغم من التأخير، فقد تم التعرف على العديد من السمات المشتركة، مثل تدفقات الرهبة واليأس والضعف. ومع ذلك، كانت هناك أيضاً اختلافات بارزة، خاصة في تصوير ردود الفعل الاجتماعية والتأثيرات الميكانيكية. كشفت محادثة الاكتشافات كيف أن الكتابة، كنوع من التعبير الاجتماعي، تلتقط وتنقل المشاعر الإنسانية المعقدة والعناصر الثقافية التي تثيرها الأوبئة. في حين ظلت اللقاءات المشتركة مثل الخوف والانزعاج ثابتة، كانت

التغييرات أكثر وضوحًا في تصوير ردود أفعال المنطقة المحلية والتقدم الميكانيكي، مما يعكس التغييرات الثقافية والتقدم في الخدمات الطبية. مع أخذ كل شيء في الاعتبار، تكشف هذه الدراسة عن نظرة ثاقبة للمثابرة من خلال موضوعات التجربة الإنسانية أثناء الأوبئة ووجهات النظر المتقدمة التي شكلتها الحركات الثقافية والمبتكرة. تسلط النتائج الضوء على أهمية الفحص العلمي لفهم الاستجابات الثقافية والإنسانية لحالات الطوارئ الصحية في جميع أنحاء العالم، وتمكين إجراء المزيد من التحقيقات متعددة التخصصات.